Being a Leader

Being a leader is one of the hardest qualities you can have as a person. You must possess certain qualities for this role, and becoming a leader is a long process.

A leader is someone who cares about a group of people. He or she will put their friends or family first, and try their best to help there every need. A leader is an example for people to follow. They are strong people with courage, honesty and reliability.

With this in mind, a leader is also someone who has little or a great deal of power over the people in their community. They now have the choice of what to do with that power.

At the same time, a leader must possess certain qualities. Three main qualities are trustworthy, loyalty and integrity.

The group must trust their leader to make good choices and lead them in the right direction. If they don't have trust, they have nothing.

Loyalty is also an important quality. The leader must be loyal to their followers, and never abandon them. He or she should always be there for his people and keep an open mind for their suggestions.

Finally, integrity. In my opinion, integrity is the most important characteristic especially for leaders. Integrity is the ability to do the right thing, no matter how hard. If you tell someone a lie about why or why not you want to do something, it shows lack of integrity.

To become a leader, you must first have a group of people who love you, and show care. You must show them your worthy, and take charge in situations. A leader must also never be afraid to stand up for themselves.

One day I hope to be one myself.
