Dramatic Arts Program

"Cutting edge - the Brock Program is the best kept secret in Ontario... among the most interesting and innovative we have in this country."

- Professor Stephen Johnson, Director of the Graduate Centre for Study of Drama, University of Toronto

Dramatic Arts Co-op

A Co-operative Education Program is an educational program which alternates periods of academic study with periods of work experience where a student is engaged in productive work within his or her corresponding field of study.

Co-operative Education students enjoy the opportunity to experience real-world training in addition to their academic lessons.

The Co-op Program provides a framework for students to make connections with employers, polish their resume writing and interview skills, and provides a context for self-reflection and critical thinking.

Why Become a Co-op Student?

In this dynamic partnership and involvement with the student's education and training, employers are considered to be co-educators. The student walks away with real world experience relevant to their future career goals.

Through the Co-operative Education process, the student is able to "test drive" different opportunities and experiences to help them decide what their future goals will be.

Our students are selected from a broad pool of candidates and accepted on the basis of academic performance. Once admitted to a Co-op program, students must meet Brock's rigorous academic standards in order to continue in the Co-op option. Becoming a Co-op student means being considered one of the best and brightest students Brock has to offer.

Participation in weekly employment readiness workshops delivered in part by industry partners, prepares students for transition to the working world. Students get the opportunity to get a head start on their career readiness years before graduation.
